GUIDE TO GIN

17TH CENTURY – DUTCH COURAGE

From 1618 – 1648, British soldiers fought alongside the Dutch during the gruelling ‘30 years’ War’. The Dutch shared their hip flasks of Genever with their comrades. The warming, bravery-inducing spirit became known as Dutch Courage.

18TH CENTURY – MOTHER’S RUIN

Gin was the intoxicant of choice in mid-eighteenth century England. The ‘poor-man’s drink’ was downed like water in every corner dram shop and became a public nuisance. There were even civic warnings issued: “Drunk for 1 penny, Dead drunk for tuppence”. Devoured in large quantities, it made men impotent, women sterile and lowered the birth rate in the country considerably. Hence the nickname.

19TH CENTURY – GIN & TONIC

Picture this: British soldiers sitting in their sweltering colonial camps, battling hordes of persistent mosquitoes and picking up a swatter more often than a rifle. Malaria was rampant, quinine was disgusting and alcohol always (okay, usually) makes everything better. Enter gin. The uniforms added the juniper-flavoured spirit to reduce the bitterness of the quinine. Over time, tonic replaced the quinine, they threw in a little sugar and a wedge of lime and the world was a happier place. G+T: 1 Mozzies: 0

WHAT IS GIN?

At the base of it all, gin is a spirit distilled from grain – usually wheat, rye or barley. But what really makes a difference is the juniper berries. The base spirit is redistilled with these berries and other natural ingredients, which are called 'botanicals'. The botanicals are flavouring agents and could be coriander, orange peel, lemon peel, cardamom, cinnamon, nutmeg, orris root, liquorice, herbs or a variety of other things. There's no real number of botanicals a gin should have and more doesn't necessarily mean better. In the end it's all about balance and harmony in flavour.

THE NAME 'GIN' IS BELIEVED TO DERIVE FROM THE DUTCH DRINK 'GENEVER'.

HOW GIN IS MADE AND ITS STYLES

Wash

Is distilled to create a high strength neutral flavoured white spirit, normally from grain

(COLD)
COMPOUND

Once this initial spirit is created, it is cooled and flavourings added after

LONDON
DRY

This spirit steam rises through pipes, to re-distil in another still – with a “botanical basket”

DISTILLED

Flavourings can be added after the process too
